FORT MASSAC.

In Illinois, near the old city of Metropolis, exists one of the most ancient and interesting historical monuments on this continent. Around old Fort Massac cluster historic memories heroic as those which enrich any page of our western annals.

Fort Massac was built by the French government in the latter part of the seventeenth century. During the short period that Spain was in possession of the Northwest Territory, Fort Massac was occupied by Spanish soldiers. In 1765 it was surrendered to the English. To the Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution this spot at once becomes of more than ordinary interest. Here, in 1778, Gen. George Rogers Clark and his band of 164 followers rested on their way to the capture of Kaskaskia. Through an act of the legislature, the beautiful, historic place has become the property of the state. It was fitting that the Daughters of the American Revolution of Illinois should take an active interest in building this monument, which is now completed, and will be dedicated on November 5. It stands on a high bluff of the Ohio river, looking across the river to the Kentucky shore, and up and down the river for many miles. Near the top of the monument, on each of the four sides, is the insignia, or shield, of each of the powers to whom this section has owed allegiance. Near the base of the monument there is a fine bronze tablet, on which there is in relief the head of George Rogers Clark. The tablet bears the following inscription:

IN MEMORY OF GEORGE ROGERS CLARK,

and his faithful companions in arms,
who, by their enterprise, courage,
devotion and sagacity, won the Illinois Country for the Commonwealth of Virginia, and so for The American Union, this monument has been erected in the name of a grateful people by the Illinois Chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

1907

Thus it stands to-day an object lesson to coming generations of Illinoisans, to remind them of what George Rogers Clark did for the nation, for Virginia, for Kentucky, for Illinois, Indiana, and the whole Northwest.

Oh, Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud?

(Lincoln's Favorite Poem.)

Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?
Like a swift-fleeting meteor, a fast-flying cloud,
A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave,
Man passes from life to his rest in the grave.

The leaves of the oak and the willow will fade,
Be scattered around and together be laid;
And the young and the old, and the low and the high,
Shall moulder to dust and together shall lie.

The infant the mother attended and loved,
The mother that infant's affection who proved;
The husband that mother and infant who blessed,
Each, all, are away to their dwellings of rest.

The maid on whose cheek, on whose brow, in whose eye,
Shone beauty and pleasure,—her triumphs are by;
And the memory of those who loved her and praised,
Are alike from the minds of the living erased.

The hand of the king that the sceptre hath borne;
The brow of the priest that the mitre hath worn;
The eye of the sage and the heart of the brave,
Are hidden and lost in the depth of the grave.

The peasant, whose lot was to sow and to reap;
The herdsman, who climbed with his goats up the steep;
The beggar, who wandered in search of his bread,
Have faded away like the grass that we tread.

The saint who enjoyed the communion of heaven,
The sinner who dared to remain unforgiven,
The wise and the foolish, the guilty and just,
Have quietly mingled their bones in the dust.

So the multitude goes, like the flowers or the weed
That withers away to let others succeed;
So the multitude comes, even those we behold,
To repeat every tale that has often been told.

For we are the same our fathers have been;
We see the same sights our fathers have seen,
We drink the same stream and view the same sun,
And run the same course our fathers have run.

The thoughts we are thinking our fathers would think;
From the death we are shrinking our fathers would shrink,
To the life we are clinging they also would cling;
But it speeds for us all, like a bird on the wing.

They loved, but the story we cannot unfold;
They scorned, but the heart of the haughty is cold;
They grieved, but no wail from their slumbers will come;
They joyed, but the tongue of their gladness is dumb.

They died, ay! they died; and we things that are now,
Who walk on the turf that lies over their brow,
Who make in their dwellings a transient abode,
Meet the things that they met on their pilgrimage road.

Yea! hope and despondency, pleasure and pain,
We mingle together in sunshine and rain;
And the smiles and the tears, the song and the dirge,
Still follow each other, like surge upon surge.

'Tis the wink of an eye, 'tis the draught of a breath,
From the blossom of health to the paleness of death,
From the gilded saloon to the bier and the shroud.—
O, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?

—William Knox.
